| Dec 2020       | Country Operational Planning (COP) advocacy calendar starts now. Start building a list of priorities for what civil society organizations suggest PEPFAR should fund differently in 2021 than in 2020. | 1. Start meeting to review last year’s COP and begin building a list of recommendations and demands you can submit to PEPFAR by the end of January 2021.
2. Take a look at the PEPFAR data for 2020 as a tool for advocacy—it tells an important story of what is working and what is not. All PEPFAR data is now online!
Need help with the data? Email us at data@pepfarwatch.org
3. Start identifying who your strongest advocates are to attend the virtual COP21 meetings between February and March 2021.
4. Get in touch with your PEPFAR coordinator to ask them for a calendar of important meetings and deadlines for your country. |
| Dec 2020       | Quarter 4 PEPFAR Oversight Accountability Response Team (POART) meetings.       | PEPFAR will hold conference calls with each country. Ask to see the data, briefings, slides, and outcomes of that meeting to help you prepare your input. |
| Nov 20 — Dec 17, 2020 | Draft COP guidelines are published. Final guidelines published by PEPFAR in Dec. | Get in touch with us at info@pepfarwatch.org for the draft guidelines and more information about how to submit your comments. |
| Jan 2021       | The formal PEPFAR COP planning process begins. This is the time to identify your priorities for change. | 1. Build a written priority list so you send it along with your representative to the strategic retreat at the end of January. We've provided a template you can use to do this, below.
2. Ask the PEPFAR coordinator for the materials you need to be engaged. They should provide:
   • Global guidance that sets the priorities of PEPFAR headquarters
   • The country planning level letters that outline the funding amounts and PEPFAR's minimum requirements. Examples of planning level letters from past years can be found here.
   • A calendar for the next few months
   • Quarter 4 POART slides
   • Access to the data (but you don't have to wait, see above)
   • Initial invitation for the community to choose a representative to be invited for the COP21 PEPFAR meetings. |

    - • Lobbying the PEPFAR team to make changes before the virtual COP approval.
    - • Coordinating with U.S.-based and global advocates to make sure PEPFAR Washington knows about further changes you still want. Remember OGAC is now reviewing the COP and changes may still be made.

- April 5—16, 2021 (all groups)
  - In country COP approval
  - Acting Global AIDS Coordinator Dr. Angeli Achrekar will officially decide whether or not to sign and approve the COP. All approvals will be conducted virtually in 2021.

- Oct 1, 2021
  - Implementation of the 2021 COPs begin.
  - Write to your Country Chair and Country Coordinator reminding them of your priorities and that activists will be watching PEPFAR progress and holding them accountable throughout the year.
What is new on PEPFAR COP engagement in 2021?

This year, unlike in past years, PEPFAR will be holding nearly all meetings virtually due to COVID-19. Through these virtual meetings, the PEPFAR country team, OGAC technical teams, representatives from global and local civil society organizations, UNAIDS, the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, TB and Malaria, Ministries of Health and the World Health Organization and PEPFAR will be expected to develop COP21 plans.

The meetings that will be held virtually include the in-country strategic planning meetings (depending on the country), COP21 planning meetings, and in-country approval meetings.

The ability for activists to meaningfully engage in the COP21 process will depend on the quality of internet connection as well as access to IT equipment. Please reach out to us at info@pepfarwatch.org for support to ensure that you and other allies in your country are able to effectively participate.

A few basics about PEPFAR

What is PEPFAR?
The U.S. President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) is the largest source of funding for the HIV response globally, with most funding focused in sub-Saharan Africa, Haiti, and in smaller regional programs in Asia, the Caribbean, and Latin America. As of September 30, 2020, this program was supporting access to HIV treatment for nearly 17.2 million people, has enabled 2.8 million babies to be born HIV-free to mothers living with HIV, and in 2020 supported testing and counselling for nearly 50 million people.

Why is PEPFAR important?
In PEPFAR’s high priority countries, PEPFAR is often the largest single source of money for HIV—often larger than the Global Fund and more than government in some countries. In other countries, PEPFAR provides smaller portions of total funding, but often for services that no other funding supports — including key populations funding. New scientific evidence shows that starting HIV treatment immediately upon diagnosis enables people to live longer, healthier lives and is among the most effective ways to prevent HIV transmission. In addition, antiretroviral medicines can also successfully be used as pre-exposure prophylaxis to prevent HIV-negative people from contracting the virus. PEPFAR has the power to help deliver the end of the AIDS pandemic by 2030, if it is fully funded and if it is held accountable to civil society goals and priorities.

<tr>
<th>How is PEPFAR organized and related to the CDC, USAID, and other U.S. agencies?</th>
<th>PEPFAR serves as the umbrella and coordinator for all U.S. government agencies providing funding for the AIDS response. Funding is spent through the U.S. Centers for Disease Control (CDC), USAID, Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA), the Departments of Defense, Commerce and Labor, and the Peace Corps. These agencies are the ones that write the contracts and manage the programs—so HIV programs funded by CDC or USAID are part of PEPFAR.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Who gets PEPFAR funding in recipient countries?</td>
<td>PEPFAR funding goes to ‘implementing partners’ (IP) that are most often large, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) as well as government agencies in the implementing country. Implementing partners are then responsible for running HIV programs and sometimes provide funding to other organizations as sub-contractors (“subs”) including smaller, local organizations to implement programs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>How does PEPFAR plan how to use its funds in each country or region?</td>
<td>Every year, PEPFAR engages in a planning process to create a Country/Regional Operational Plan (COP/ROP) for each major country or region that receives funding. The resulting plan sets out the budget, targets, geographic focus, and expected impact of PEPFAR funding for the following fiscal year. Implementation follows the U.S. fiscal year—so it begins in October of each year and ends in September of the next year.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Why should you care about influencing PEPFAR?</td>
<td>PEPFAR is a dominant source of funding for HIV treatment, prevention, care and health systems strengthening in many countries. The stakes are higher than ever to make sure that this funding is put to the best possible use. With most countries failing to achieve the 90-90-90 goals by the end of 2020, progress toward epidemic control, is dangerously off track. Continued activism is needed to ensure that the new 95-95-95 goals are met. It is critical that affected communities and civil society activists are authentically and meaningfully involved in the process in order to ensure that PEPFAR funding is used in accordance with community needs.</td>

Key PEPFAR players

U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator

Dr. Angeli Achrekar is the acting Global AIDS Coordinator. Dr. Achrekar will approve all the final COPs. She holds the ultimate power to approve (or not approve) the COPs.

The Country Chair

Each country has a chairperson. This person is based in the Office of the Global AIDS Coordinator in Washington, D.C., but they oversee the country operational planning process. This person has significant influence over whether the COP will be approved and sets the agenda for key meetings, including the Regional Planning Meeting, and so can ensure key priorities are acted upon.

The PEPFAR country teams

There will be a many other people working for the U.S. government and PEPFAR in your country who focus on different aspects of the implementation of the COPs. These people may work for PEPFAR, CDC, USAID, or various other agencies. Some key parts of the country team are:

• The Country Ambassador. The U.S. Ambassador for each country is the supervisor of the PEPFAR Country Team. You may also meet the deputy chief of mission (DCM) or deputy ambassador. Some are very active on PEPFAR and some less so, but they can have very significant influence over what goes into the COP.

• The PEPFAR Country Coordinator. Each country has a PEPFAR coordinator. They are responsible for managing the different department teams and designing the timelines for the POART and the COP. They ensure the teams come together to review and interrogate the data. This person is one main point of contact with PEPFAR in country. They often do not make the final decisions, but they coordinate all the different team members.

• Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), United States Agency for International Development (USAID), Department of Defense (DoD) Leaders. Each agency also has a director and staff in every country, who are in charge of managing the implementation of PEPFAR. They often have a lot of power over the details of the COP and the deepest knowledge of particular areas.

Implementing Partners

These are the organizations that receive PEPFAR financing in order to implement the COP.
Influencing PEPFAR country plans

What is a Country/Regional Operational Plan (or COP)?

Country and Regional Operational Plans are plans created jointly by several U.S. government agencies that outline how the billions of dollars in HIV funding from the U.S. government will be allocated and spell out programmatic priorities and targets in recipient countries and regions. Each COP/ROP consists of a detailed budget and target report and a narrative account of PEPFAR’s plans, known as a Strategic Direction Summary (SDS). Both parts of the COP contain important information for activists, but if you’re just getting started you can begin by reading the 2020 Strategic Direction Summary for your country or region.

The SDS outlines the main goals and targets PEPFAR is setting out to achieve in your country/region, which populations and geographic areas PEPFAR will prioritize, what strategies and interventions PEPFAR and its implementers are planning to use to achieve their goals and targets, and how they will monitor progress. The SDS also contains details about who is funding what in the AIDS response in the country, and about the state of the epidemic and response in the country as a whole, among other important pieces of information.

Can you actually participate in the process?

For years the COP process was closed—a confidential U.S.-government-only set of discussions that excluded affected communities. Health GAP and a coalition of activists in the U.S. and East and Southern Africa fought to open the process, beginning in 2013. We continue to insist that the inputs from people most affected by HIV should weigh more heavily than those from bureaucrats. Currently, members of civil society are able to take part in COP planning and monitoring in most countries through quarterly meetings.

What role have activists played in influencing PEPFAR policy before they officially had a seat at the table?

Even before they had an official seat at the table, activists have successfully influenced PEPFAR’s programs and policies. For its first decade, PEPFAR funded several HIV policies that were not based on evidence such as abstinence-only programs that undermined the HIV response. Activists demanded that PEPFAR change these policies, and have consistently called on PEPFAR to increase its focus on evidence-based interventions. Activists have also won increased funding for PEPFAR and, a few years ago—when some in the U.S. administration said HIV treatment was “unsustainable” and pushed PEPFAR to move away from the “treatment mortgage”—activists successfully pushed for exactly the opposite.

Communities need to be at the center of decision making and involved in the program implementation.
Communities need to be at the center of decision making and involved in program implementation.
How can activists in recipient countries influence PEPFAR?

PEPFAR civil society meetings are meant to be open to all members of civil society interested in the PEPFAR process. In implementing countries, activists are officially invited into PEPFAR’s in-country program planning process and given access to the documents, data and plans. Of course, this does not mean this has always happened in practice. In fact, in countries where invitations have not been forthcoming, activists have attended based on information they received from other invited activists. This gives activists the opportunity to pressure PEPFAR to fund the interventions most needed by their communities.

Civil society should expect ongoing engagement and dialogue throughout the year (COP development, COP reviews, Annual Program Results (APR) and Semi-annual Program Result (SAPR) reviews, ongoing program monitoring and evaluation, etc.). PEPFAR teams in countries have been told by PEPFAR headquarters to plan civil society consultations through a formal structure on a quarterly basis at a minimum. Then every year there is a COP Planning Meeting where the COP for the year is designed at a meeting that normally takes place in Johannesburg, South Africa and there at minimum two civil society representatives from each country who are selected and funded to attend and represent the views of civil society. Due to COVID-19, in COP21 this meeting will take place virtually.

Yes! In 2021, we worked with civil society activists to use the COP process to win changes to PEPFAR programming that reflect community needs. These included:

- In South Africa, activists emphasized the grave risk of the premature removal of earlier “surge” funding in COP20, winning a commitment from PEPFAR to increase funding for human resources based on an analysis of gaps.

- In Kenya, activists advocated for a restoration of prior year funding levels ($18.4 Million) for key populations programming and increased the level of funding for COP20 to US$ 20,500,000.

Have activists actually had a real impact on these plans?

Acting U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator, Dr. Angeli Achrekar, responds at a town hall meeting hosted by local civil society organisations to share their priorities for PEPFAR in South Africa.
• In Malawi, activists secured a major shift in PEPFAR funding away from low-impact technical support and toward scaling up of direct service provision for communities with an increase in the numbers of community healthcare workers, including adding 380 healthcare workers through a new PEPFAR funding mechanism with the Government of Malawi.

• In Uganda, activists won an expansion of the Young People and Adolescent Peer Support (YAPs) model nationally. The YAPS model will be expanded from 50 to 71 districts.

• In Mozambique, activists won increased investment in modalities that bring treatment closer to communities (including key populations) through expanding the use of interventions such as community-based ART distribution in all provinces and exploring expansion of mobile clinics beyond the current four provinces.

• In Tanzania, activists secured an ambitious scale up of PrEP to 180,000 people, and demanded a plan for reviewing implementation of index testing strategies that engages civil society and ensures index testing is “client centered”—prioritizing safety, confidentiality, and human rights.

How do we turn “engagement” into meaningful impact?

The criteria for civil society participation in the COP process are clearly laid out in the COP guidance: PEPFAR requires civil society COP engagement plans, meetings with interested civil society groups, and written feedback to be shared between civil society and PEPFAR.

But a seat at the table does not necessarily translate into meaningful input into PEPFAR program planning. Only where activists have proactively used these opportunities to hold PEPFAR accountable—pushing the program to deliver on the transparency and access it has promised—has ‘engagement’ resulted in impact.
“Civil society is holding our feet to the fire. They are making us uncomfortable. That is good. We need to feel uncomfortable.”

— UNAIDS Country Official
5 Steps to Start Influencing the PEPFAR Country Plans

1. Clearly outline key recommendations & demands

It is important to work with other activists ahead of the COP planning process cycle to develop a priority list of recommendations to demand from PEPFAR. This will be the basis of what you demand from the PEPFAR teams throughout the COP cycle.

By getting this clear from the beginning, you can all sing from the same sheet of music (so to speak) throughout the process—and international PEPFAR Watch partners can help to amplify your demands. You can use this template to craft your demands:

What is the priority intervention? Identify the area or intervention of concern (e.g. Pediatric HIV treatment, or Prevention for men who have sex with men)

What is PEPFAR doing on this in 2020? Take a look at your country’s 2019 COP for the current language on what they’re doing. Dive into the Q3 and Q4 data - what does it tell us about progress, and why we need our interventions?

What should PEPFAR be doing on this in 2021? What specific language should PEPFAR include in the COP? What should the target be? Be clear and specific! Do we know what budget is needed?

2. Dive into the data

By using data and evidence from PEPFAR’s programs to formulate your demands, you can make them sharper, and your proposals more specific. Maybe you want more focus on underperforming geographic areas, or more money investing in programs that are lagging behind. Maybe the data proves that we need better interventions to support linkage or retention. Maybe the data shows that programs targeting key populations need strengthening. Whatever the demand, using PEPFAR data will help strengthen your advocacy. See the “monitoring” section of the guide for where to find the data and how to analyse it.

Overview of the PEPFAR COP Planning Cycle

- December: Time to outline your priorities
- January: Chance for you to push PEPFAR on the things you think should change.
- Late Jan / early February: In-Country COP21 Planning Meetings.
- February / March: Virtual COP21 Planning Meetings.
- March / April: Feedback on the draft COP requested before submission.
- Early April: Don’t stop now! Keep pushing because OGAC is still reviewing the COP!
- Late April: Final COP is signed.
3. Visit and Monitor PEPFAR sites through community-led monitoring

By going to visit and monitoring some PEPFAR sites you will have first hand information—our own community-led monitoring data—at your fingertips in order to call out PEPFAR’s poor performance - or to prove why PEPFAR must prioritise your interventions. Depending on the capacity of activists, community groups and civil society organizations in your country, you can design a simple monitoring survey to collect data in a handful, or more expansive, set of sites. For one example of community-led monitoring, visit www.ritshidze.org.za

4. Engage with PEPFAR before and after the COP21 Planning Meeting

Make sure you write to both the Country Chair and Country Coordinator in January outlining your demands—and meet with your country team ahead of the COP21 Planning Meeting. Use the meeting to continue to make your demands. Keep track of what PEPFAR promises in the meeting in your checklist. After the meeting, write to the Country Chair and Country Coordinator outlining what promises you heard them make. Get it on record. Ask to see the draft SDS when it is ready. Analyse the draft SDS. Are your demands and targets included? What is missing? Suggest language they should include in the SDS. Write back to the Country Chair and Coordinator with your suggestions. Make it impossible for them to ignore your demands.

Tip: The COP21 Planning Meetings

After the in-country strategic planning meeting, PEPFAR normally invites country teams and civil society to Johannesburg to discuss the country priorities together with the OGAC based team. Due to COVID-19, for COP21 this will be a virtual meeting. The PEPFAR country team, OGAC technical teams, representatives from global and local civil society organizations, UNAIDS, the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, TB and Malaria, Ministries of Health and the World Health Organization will all be present. The goal of the meeting is to present the country plan vision for debate and consensus by representatives. In the past, activists have successfully used the meeting to rally and push for changes in the proposed country plan to ensure more ambitious targets and activities are supported.

5. Amplify community voices

Often the people impacted by PEPFAR money and services seem to be forgotten in discussions. Dehumanising language like “positives” and “clients” is used in the literature—forgetting that these are people first. Bringing in community voices will refocus those discussions.

Once you have outlined your demands, you might want to get a handful of people who are in need of your interventions to speak out. Hearing the plight of a community healthcare worker working for a small stipend, without access to gloves and masks, could highlight the reality of why PEPFAR should invest in human resources. Seeing a young pregnant school girl explaining how she had no way of accessing a condom, for example, would make real the need for easy access to condoms and prevention tools in schools. Listening to someone who is struggling to take their HIV pills everyday could convince PEPFAR of the need for better differentiated care models including support groups at facilities.
TIP: The tactics we expanded in 2020: “The People’s COP” in 5 countries

The “People’s COP”—established in South Africa and now used in multiple other countries—is a tactic used to influence the development of the COP. Using data collected from clinics and other health facilities, a comprehensive document is developed that outlines community’s recommendations to PEPFAR. In past years, the recommendations have been launched in high-profile community events attended by people living with HIV, alongside current Acting U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator Dr. Angeli Achrekar and former U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator Ambassador Deborah Birx and the leadership of each of the U.S. agencies involved in PEPFAR in South Africa. The events—held in 2018, 2019, and 2020—pushed the voices of people living with HIV, young women, key populations, and health workers into the PEPFAR discussions that too often focus on numbers and targets instead of people and lives.

In 2020, People’s COPs were developed in five countries: Kenya, Uganda, Malawi, Zimbabwe, and South Africa.

“The People’s COP is fantastic—it’s a clear best practice. It makes specific recommendations that we can really act on. I’ve asked the team to go point by point and be clear on what we are going to do on each point. We wish all countries had this.” — Former U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator Ambassador Deborah Birx
Monitoring PEPFAR country plans

Why should activists monitor the implementation of PEPFAR Country Plans?

By May, the PEPFAR Country Operational Planning cycle comes to an "end" but at this point our advocacy is far from over. Turning COP victories on paper into reality takes persistent advocacy and watchdogging. It is now time to shift to monitoring the implementation of the commitments won—often a much more difficult thing to do.

Overview of the PEPFAR COP monitoring cycle

(Q1 data released in March)
(Q2 data released in June)
(Q3 data released in September)
(Q4 data released in January)

Attending and providing feedback in the PEPFAR Oversight Accountability Response Team (POART) meetings and engaging with PEPFAR monitoring data shared at the Regional Planning Meeting are important ways of tracking the implementation of your demands and assessing PEPFAR’s impact. This is where you can evaluate important questions, such as: How well are they doing on testing? Are they meeting prevention targets? How many people who test positive are being linked to treatment and care services? Are people staying on treatment? Are people being lost to follow-up? Is it the same across the country—or are different areas doing better or worse?

It is important to note that while PEPFAR officials spend months with their data and presentations, you might be seeing them for the first time in real-time as it is presented. This means that, as members of civil society, we must build our capacity to raise concerns on the spot, calling out areas of weakness or willful neglect to push for high-impact strategies. We must become detectives, digging into the data and identifying gaps – and then boldly challenging PEPFAR, the Global Fund, and Ministry of Health officials to do more, do better and do it faster.

How can activists track PEPFAR’s progress to ensure higher impact?
What is the purpose of quarterly PEPFAR Oversight Accountability Response Team (POART) meetings?

POART discussions and other civil society engagement activities are intended to communicate the progress of the program and as an opportunity for civil society to provide feedback about how the program can be improved. However, this often takes the form of a slideshow presentation which cannot, on its own, adequately communicate a complete picture of the program. If PEPFAR has not presented sufficient information for you to understand how a certain area of the program is performing and suggest improvements, you can and should request further information and an opportunity for further engagement once you have had time to digest it.

How can you begin to make sense of PEPFAR’s data?

We know that data can be quite overwhelming, but with a few pointers it gets easier! Generally, it’s important to observe the initial target while analyzing the data. The data can make PEPFAR look like they are doing very well (e.g. we reached 97% of our target), but if the target is low to begin with then the outcome is still not good enough. In this case, it’s a good idea to advocate to PEPFAR that the targets be more ambitious and higher in the next COP cycle.

It’s also a good idea to look at data going back more than one year. PEPFAR will often explain that low performance is due to seasonal trends or that this is ‘normal for that time of year’ and that they ‘expect performance will improve next quarter.’ You can easily determine if that is the case by looking back at the trends the last couple of years.
TIP: Explore PEPFAR data using amfAR’s PEPFAR Monitoring, Evaluation, and Reporting Database:

The PEPFAR Monitoring, Evaluation, and Reporting (MER) database presents data on a set of PEPFAR data points (MER indicators) that PEPFAR uses to track progress in its programs. You can use this resource to identify where progress is lagging, where there are gaps, and to help develop your demands for the POART and RPM meetings. Here are some tips on navigating the database:

- Exploring progress on treatment: On the website, first select your country. You will first see a page that describes the treatment cascade. PEPFAR monitors HIV treatment through a cascade of indicators: HIV testing (total tested and the number diagnosed with HIV), linkage to treatment, initiation on treatment, retention on treatment, and the total number on ART. Each of the relevant indicators is shown in the treatment page.

- Exploring progress on prevention: In the second tab, you can monitor PEPFAR HIV prevention programs. Here you can see indicators on the PMTCT program (pregnant women initiated on treatment, infants tested and treated), VMMC, prevention programs for key and priority populations, and PrEP.

- Exploring progress by district: By default, both of these pages will show you data at the national level and across the entire PEPFAR program. Selecting districts in the map will update the data to just the districts selected. The filters on the left of the page can look at the targets and results for direct service delivery (DSD) or technical assistance (TA) separately.

- Identifying PEPFAR’s geographic priority areas in your country: Importantly, PEPFAR’s district priorities mean it does much more work in some districts than others. You can identify those districts that are most important to PEPFAR on the left filters as Attained or Scale-Up versus those that are Sustained or Centrally-Supported. You can select a specific quarter or you can look at the overall year-to-date (YTD) results.

- Understanding PEPFAR’s indicators: Definitions for all of the indicators that PEPFAR uses are available next to the map on the Indicator Trends & Performance pages, along with a link to the full text of each indicator. Also, under every graph on the website, there is a drop down menu which explains that indicator, how each indicator fits into the treatment and/or prevention programs, and desirable trends. Importantly, it will also show you examples of how you (and PEPFAR) should be interpreting the targets and results, as well as examples of misleading or inaccurate ways of describing the data. It’s a good idea to read through these dropdowns as you look at the graphs to make sure that you notice any potential problems that should be raised in your next meeting.

- Get data summaries for your country: You can get a summary of the data for your country. At the top-right of each page, just click the ‘Download Fact Sheet’ and you’ll see a PDF with all of the same information. The last page of the fact sheet has a convenient way to see the codes PEPFAR uses most frequently.

- Digging deeper: If you have concerns with the targets or performance for any indicator, you can dig deeper into the data by switching to the third tab ("Indicator Trends & Performance"). Select your indicator of interest from the dropdown menu. From this page you can see a map that will show you the number of services provided, indicator targets, and performance against targets in each district. Further down, you can see detailed trend data in each quarter. Under ‘District Performance,’ you can see which districts have the highest and lowest performance. Finally, at the bottom of the page (and every page!) there are data tables, which can be sorted by performance, target size, or district priority.
How can you get ready for your next quarterly monitoring meeting with PEPFAR?

It is important that you arrive at the POART meetings prepared to evaluate the data reported. To better prepare, you should ask your Country Coordinator to send you the quarterly data or presentations ahead of your meeting. Even if the Country Coordinator doesn’t share the data ahead of time, you should review historical progress toward targets on amfAR’s MER Database, available online at http://mer.amfar.org/.

Before you go into your next quarterly monitoring meeting with PEPFAR, it’s a good idea to spend as much time as you can before the meeting looking at the data. If you have received the data pack before the meeting, take a look to see if performance has improved over the last quarter. Look carefully through the database and highlight issues and, if possible, some potential reasons for poor performance (such as lagging results in centrally-supported districts, or one district that’s doing much worse than the others, or low linkage to care leading to missed treatment targets).

Finally, if you see weak performance in some districts, it’s a good idea to do on-the-ground fact-finding to determine what is causing the poor performance. This will often give you much more information than PEPFAR has and will let you come into the next PEPFAR meeting ready to tell them the exact reasons why a program is not succeeding in a region. Your suggestions for improving the program can be especially effective when tied to the indicators PEPFAR uses to evaluate itself.

The more practice you have with this, the easier it will become!

5 Steps to Start Monitoring the Implementation of PEPFAR Country Plans

1. Document your demands and PEPFAR's commitments: First, it is very important to document the recommendations, demands, and commitments made during the COP review. You should also document the responses that you were given by the Country Coordinator and other PEPFAR staff during the COP Review. This should include who responded to your demands, when they responded, what they agreed to and in what timeframe.

2. Review the Strategic Direction Summary carefully: The draft Strategic Development Summary (SDS) document will be released shortly after the COP Review is finished with a very small window of opportunity to make comments or request edits to this document. Read through this document to see if your suggestions have been incorporated into the document. If you have requested changes to how programs are run and they do not appear in the SDS, it is much harder to get those changes implemented later.

3. Stay in touch with your Country Coordinator: Next, you should follow up with your Country Coordinator after the COP Review is concluded. You should first reiterate the demands that you have made and remind them of what they have agreed to do.

4. Ask for the schedule of important quarterly meetings for your country: You should also ask your Country Coordinator to send you the schedule of quarterly data review or PEPFAR Oversight Accountability Response Team (POART) meetings. These are meetings that happen every three months in which PEPFAR country teams outline progress against their quarterly targets. Country teams also report back to OGAC on their quarterly performance via conference calls. Make sure to request the dates for these calls as well. As part of these calls, country team are expected to report back on what civil society recommendations were given during the quarterly meetings. Meeting with your country teams before they do these calls to ensure the civil society input is reflected in the call.

5. Get familiar with your country's PEPFAR performance data: The most user-friendly way to obtain PEPFAR's program performance data is via amfAR's PEPFAR Monitoring, Evaluation and Reporting database described in detail above. Spend some time exploring the database and reach out to us at data@pepfarwatch.org if you have any questions or are ready to dive even deeper.
Getting involved in PEPFAR watch

If you need help developing your demands and crafting an advocacy plan to influence or monitor PEPFAR, email us at info@pepfarwatch.org

About PEPFAR Watch

PEPFAR Watch is a growing network of civil society organizations, non-governmental organizations, activists and data analysts working together to ensure greater accountability of PEPFAR to the communities it serves. Together we influence the policies and practices of PEPFAR at the headquarter-level, and monitor and influence plans, programs and budgets at the country-level, to ensure that the single-largest source of funding for the global HIV response is put to the best possible use. Members of the network also provide technical assistance to activists and organizations interested in working to influence and monitor PEPFAR.

About Health GAP

Health GAP is an international advocacy organization dedicated to ensuring that all people living with HIV have access to affordable life sustaining medicines. Our team pairs pragmatic policy work with audacious grassroots action to win equitable access to treatment, care and prevention for people living with and affected by HIV worldwide. We are dedicated to eliminating barriers to universal access to affordable life sustaining medicines for people living with HIV/AIDS as key to a comprehensive strategy to confront and ultimately stop the AIDS pandemic. We believe that the human right to life and to health must prevail over the pharmaceutical industry’s excessive profits and expanding patent rights.
